Dear Sir/ Madam,

I am writing to express my concern about the continued teaching of "creationism" in Scottish schools. Creationism is complete nonsense as evidenced by the science that supports evolution. However, if Scottish schools really need to include creationism in the curriculum then perhaps it would be best taught in religious studies under the sub heading "faith", rather than as a serious science.

Teaching creationism as a science in the modern world is to ignore the evidence and is a shameful contamination of science excellence in our schools.

Yours sincerely
